Markkula Center for Applied Ethics "Decision implies the end of deliberation and the beginning of action. It is a moment of knowledge. by mastering simple heuristics, an approach he calls “fast from the gut” leadership style, he is not talking about the psychological or emotional aspects of leadership. Instead, he is exploring how leaders can make decisions more effectively by relying on simple, intuitive processes. His approach is rooted in the idea that leaders often make decisions based on their gut instincts or intuitions, rather than careful analysis. This can lead to more effective and efficient decision making, as intuition can help leaders to quickly identify the most important information and make decisions based on that information. However, intuition can also lead to mistakes, as leaders may not always have access to all the information they need to make informed decisions. To overcome this, leaders need to be able to identify when they are relying too heavily on intuition and to seek additional information or advice when necessary. This approach requires a willingness to change and to be open to new ideas and perspectives. By doing so, leaders can make more effective decisions and improve the overall effectiveness of their organizations."
