Jack White - Ice Station Zebra

Jack White has embarked on his newfound rap fascination to its logical conclusion and actually rapping in the song "Ice Station Zebra." This track is from his album "Boarding House Reach," which has been well-received by critics and fans alike. The song is a tribute to the 1968 Cold War thriller film "Ice Station Zebra," directed by John Sturges and starring Rock Hudson, Ernest Borgnine, and Patrick McGoohan.

"Ice Station Zebra" is about a USN nuclear submarine, USS Tigerfish, that must rush to the North Pole to rescue the staff of Drift Ice Station Zebra weather station. The story is set in the Cold War and centers around a confrontation between the US and the Soviet Union. The plot involves a secret film capsule from a Russian spacecraft that lands near the station, leading to a race against time to prevent it from falling into enemy hands.

Jack White's version of the song takes inspiration from the original score composed by Michel Legrand. The French composer's work is widely regarded as one of the best film scores of the 1960s, earning him two Academy Awards for Best Original Score and Best Original Song.

White's take on "Ice Station Zebra" is a nod to the film's enduring appeal and its place in the history of Cold War cinema. It's also a representation of the artist's versatility, showing that he can tackle a wide range of genres and styles with ease. The combination of White's distinctive voice and the film's iconic theme creates a unique and compelling audio experience for fans of both the singer and the movie.

In conclusion, Jack White's "Ice Station Zebra" is not just another rap song but a thoughtful homage to a classic film. It demonstrates his ability to fuse different elements creatively and his commitment to exploring a variety of musical directions. Whether you're a fan of White's music or a film enthusiast, this track is sure to provide some memorable moments of listening pleasure.
